LEARNING, TEACHING AND ASSESSMENT INFORMATION

6a. Module Description

Introduction to Policing supports your development of an understanding of the origins of the modern Police Service, and the nature of Police work in the broadest sense, including the social and political environment within which modern policing emerged and currently operates.

You will be able to reflect on your current role, or potential roles as an officer, or within the wider police family. You will appreciate how and why the British Police Service came about, the cultural and political ethos behind the service, and the legal and ethical frameworks that inform the sector.

Introduction to Policing will help you to understand the demands placed on Police Forces and their officers, staff, and volunteers, including potential developments in the future.

You will critically consider how the internet and digital media have effected changes to the policing landscape by facilitating the commission of burgeoning crime types. You will also consider emerging types of new criminal activity, and responses that may be required from law enforcers to combat them. Your learning will be academically grounded through a critical engagement with the debates and controversies surrounding policing. You will develop and maintain a reflective learning log to support your development and your continuing studies. The reflective log will be used as the basis of tutorial work and formative assessment.

The module will be taught by weekly lecture and seminar.

6b. Outline Content

- The origins of the modern police service, including the creation of the Metropolitan Police; the roots of policing by consent; the so-called 'Peelian' principles; and the policing mission; mapping the continuities and changes of pre-modern policing to the present day.
- The social context of policing work and the way that this has influenced the development of the modern police service; understanding informal social control and public consent, as well as examining some of the major crises in policing and the way that social changes have affected demand in policing.
- Introduction to police powers, their legislative foundation, and the restrictions on police actions
- Policing diversity – including the Stephen Lawrence case and an introduction to the idea of institutional racism
- Governance and accountability in policing; including the respective roles of the Home Office, PCCs, HMICFRS, the IOPC, the College of Policing and other key stakeholders in modern police accountability
- The political process and policing; an introduction to the way that political decisions can have an impact upon policing policy and how that affects police work
- The changing nature of police work and how demand has altered,
- Policing in a digital age: the changing role of technology in crime, investigations and public demand
- Police cultures and how these can influence police behaviour and recruitment, especially with regard to gender, ethnicity, sexual orientation and class
- Public perception of policing, confidence and legitimacy, and procedural justice
- Reflective practice
- Effective communication
- Study skills, including academic writing, referencing, and critical thinking skills
