LEARNING, TEACHING AND ASSESSMENT INFORMATION

6a. Module Description

An effective support team makes use of various sports and exercise sciences, such as physiology, biomechanics, and psychology, to help improve the performance of an athlete, of a team, or the quality of life of the general public. In Applied Sport Psychology we'll explore how to plan a sport psychology intervention, from the different perspectives that can be adopted by practitioners, to understanding when and how different psychological skill training techniques (e.g., goal setting, imagery, mindfulness) can be used. Through the adoption of a flipped teaching approach, you'll be engaging with the latest research within the topic areas and you'll learn how to examine and critique it. Together with the members of your team, you'll then be encouraged to apply this research to case study scenarios. Life briefs and guest speakers with expertise in the areas explored will add richness to the content and variety of the module, which will consist of a series of lectures mixed with practice-based sessions. As well as providing you with subject-specific knowledge, this module also helps develop a number of transferable skills relevant to general employment including interpersonal skills, data collection, handling, presentation, and reflective practice. The content is therefore appropriate for students following both the Sport and Exercise Science and the Sport Coaching and Physical Education courses

6b. Outline Content

- Coach-athlete relationship - Theory and practice
- Goal setting - Theory and practice
- Imagery - Theory and practice
- Relaxation techniques
- Examples of applied work with different populations (e.g., mental health issues, disability, youth athletes)
