LEARNING, TEACHING AND ASSESSMENT INFORMATION

6a. Module Description

Apply the knowledge and training that you have accrued through your degree to a work-place setting by using the principles of organisational psychology. In undertaking this module, students will be introduced to theories and research of organisational psychology and explore the central aspects of how psychological theory and skills are applicable in real-life employment settings. In doing so you will be required to complete 35 hours of either voluntary or paid work experience in a role where you can apply psychological knowledge and other degree-related skills (research, report writing, data entry and analysis). This could be 1 week of full-time work or several weeks of part-time work; work, and can even be completed over the summer period prior to the module, however it must be no later than the first 5 weeks of this module.

You will have a series of six campus-based lectures and five campus-based seminars that you will need to attend in amongst your 35 hours (minimum) hours of relevant voluntary work placement, which you are required to organise. Lectures will cover the workplace experience element and an introduction to occupational/ organisational psychology. Whilst in your seminars you will learn about relevant psychological concepts, participate in discussions with other students about their workplace experiences, and receive help and advice from the module leader in completing your coursework assessment.

The staff in the placement organisation will provide the usual level of guidance for volunteer workers and will confirm in writing that the student completed the recommended number of hours.
