LEARNING, TEACHING AND ASSESSMENT INFORMATION

6a. Module Description

You'll develop core marketing principles in a retail and experiential context and specialist knowledge of the retail and experience industry, such as museums, galleries, and physical visitor experiences, all from a marketing perspective. You'll explore retail and experiential marketing's key issues such as retail mixes and strategies, the 'retail product', experiential elements of customer satisfaction, digital retailing, behaviour research and supply chain management and retail performance. You'll look at the synergy between retail marketing and the marketing of experiences focusing on the services area of marketing. The sustainable and ethical issues of retail and experience operations are considered including the growth of consumerism, use of consumer data, environmental impact and consumer attitudes to debt.

6b. Outline Content

The retail environment - models of retail change - competitive strategies - the "retail product" and retail marketing mixes - merchandising - retail pricing - consumer behaviour - positioning and store image - service and quality - retail formats, atmospherics, locations and strategies - supply chain management - brands - new technology
Internationalisation/globalisation - consumerism and ethics - research techniques in "shopper marketing".

Marketing experiences - changes in the management of physical visitor experiences - managing visitor experience services - the challenges of inclusion and diversity in visitor experiences - ethical and environmental challenges to the management of physical visitor experiences.
