LEARNING, TEACHING AND ASSESSMENT INFORMATION

6a. Module Description

On this module you will explore storytelling in many forms, studying how writers craft narratives for different media and platforms, studying how writers adapt the core concepts of new and existing stories, creating your own narratives, and analysing your creative work. You will also investigate craft, learning about other writers' techniques and experimenting with and reflecting on your own writing practice.

You will work across a range of forms, such as television, radio and comic scripts, podcasts, poetry, interactive fiction and writing for games, and engage in analysis of a diverse range of classic and contemporary examples. You will examine creative processes, both your own and those of others, from the collection of ideas, to planning in forms such as maps, outlines and treatments, to the production and editing of finished work. You will be required to engage in this process by maintaining a reading journal and writer's notebook where you will record your responses to material viewed and listened to, read, played, and created; thereby encouraging the integration of viewing/listening/reading/playing and writing.

Writing exercises will focus on practical writing techniques, such as writing an effective treatment or outline, and exploring the different techniques needed for different platforms and audiences so that each piece you produce serves to further expand and develop a shared fictional world. Seminar workshops are based around the reading and writing exercises prepared each week. You will be expected to read out and listen to other students' work and engage in constructive criticism of the techniques and sources used; you will also discuss questions of audience, style, and research.

In craft workshops, exercises will focus on how you direct your time, attention, and focus towards creative projects, and how you shape your personal narrative as a writer. You will study different ways of planning and executing work, document your own experiments, investigate what inspires and motivates you, share insights with your writing group, and contribute to peers' understandings of self-concept and identity as well as your own.

In Part 1, you will emphasise breadth, understanding and utilising the techniques and conventions that apply to different formats, technologies and platforms, preparing you for focus on selected platforms and techniques in Part 2.
