LEARNING, TEACHING AND ASSESSMENT INFORMATION

6a. Module Description

The module's focus will move chronologically but also thematically from 1880 to 2000. We will open with examining late nineteenth century concerns with the 'new woman', the male homosexual, and newly defined sexualities. We will then move on to consider first-wave feminism, and the first world war in relation to issues of gender. A subsequent focus on the interwar period will cover the emergence of the 'flapper', anxieties about male effeminacy, male body building and the development of miscegenation fears – all fuelled by the ever-growing popular press. The effects of gender-differentiated (un)employment in this period will be analysed as well as the development of birth control, taking the work of Marie Stopes as a central focus. We will examine the trial of The Well of Loneliness and the slow emergence of the idea of the lesbian. We will investigate women's role during the 2nd world war, including drawing on the reportage of Mass-Observation. For the post-war years, we will consider relations between, and reaction to, British women and African-Caribbean men. The 1950s' Wolfenden Report offers an opening to the discussion of male homosexuality and prostitution in this period and beyond. The so-called swinging '60s and sexual 'permissiveness' will be followed by an examination of the rise of the Women's Liberation Movement and Gay Liberation in the 1970s. We will look too at how feminism developed on from the 1970s up until the turn of the century.

This overview of the history of gender and sexuality in modern Britain in the period 1880-2000 will allow you to appreciate how sexuality needs to be understood as socially constructed and regulated, as well as always historically specific. The module will also enable you to appreciate the shifts in the ways in which men and women have conceived of their appropriate 'roles', paying attention to differences of class, race, ethnicity, geographical location, sexuality and age. Analysis of certain primary sources will enrich this understanding. The module is taught through lectures and seminars, and is assessed by an oral history essay and the report of an in-class presentation.
