LEARNING, TEACHING AND ASSESSMENT INFORMATION

6a. Module Description

This module examines ethical issues arising in areas such as healthcare, criminal and international law, and the environment. In the area of medical ethics, we will be debating questions such as: Should assisted dying be legalised? What are the arguments for and against abortion? Is a patient's autonomy more important than their welfare? In the area of law, we will be debating the justification for criminal punishment, the ethics of war and peace, the philosophy of sex and gender, and whether we have a duty to give to charity, amongst other things. In relation to the environment and non-human world, we will interrogate recent work on animal rights and the politics of animal ethics, including debates about the morality of human intervention to stop natural predation and the possibility of animal friendship and citizenship.

Through this module you will develop critical thinking, employability, and problem-solving skills. You will enhance your teamworking and communication skills through group-work, class debates, and presentations. Peer-led question and answer sessions after each presentation will help to develop your ability to seek and act on constructive criticism. The Live Brief element, co-designed with a professional external partner, will help you evidence the practical application of your learning in a work context.

9. Assessment for the above Module Occurrence

The assessment for some modules includes a presentation (see below for details on how this particular module is assessed). We recognise that presenting, especially to a large group, can cause significant anxiety or distress for some students. If this may affect you, please contact your Module Leader or the Disability and Neurodiversity Service as early as possible. We will work with you to consider appropriate reasonable adjustments. Depending on your individual needs, these might include, for example, presenting to a smaller group or presenting only to a member of academic staff.
